View of Ras al Khaimah

After original sketches by James Silk Buckingham

Watercolour and ink on paper

8.8 cm high, 14.2 cm wide

Stock no.: A5499

A sketch of the port city of Ras Al Khaimah, United Arab Emirates. A label on the reverse of this sketch incorrectly identifies it as a drawing taken from the album of sketches for James Justinian Morier's Journey through Persia and Asia Minor to Constantinople in the years 1808–1809. It is, in fact, a preliminary sketch for a woodcut to illustrate James Silk Buckingham's 1830 book Travels in Assyria, Media, and Persia. A prolific travel writer, Buckingham wrote several volumes on his journey overland to India. In this, the second volume, Buckingham picks up in Baghdad in 1828 and ends in the port of Muscat. The sketches he made during his travels were then handed over to a professional artist and illustrator, William Henry Brooke (1772–1860), to transfer onto wood before a separate engraver finished the job.

The sketch of Ras al Khaimah illustrates the heading of chapter 8, vol. II: 'The Chief Port of the Wahabee Pirates'.¹ The name in pencil in the top righthand corner, 'White', refers to the intended engraver. According to the list of figures, a White did work as an engraver on this project, but the sketch of Ras al Khaimah was eventually engraved by a Slader.

Several watercolours by William Henry Brooke for the same publication are held in the British Museum, London. A sketch of the tomb of Hafez in Shiraz, Iran (no. 2014,6012.3) is labelled no. 16; a sketch of Kazerun, Iran (no. 2014,6012.2), is labelled no. 19; and a view of Aqar Quf, Iraq (no. 1957,0221.6), is labelled no. 21.
